

The Word we took for Granted

For some people hope is a wish, a wish they hope will come true.
Like how people say they hope tomorrow, will bring skies of blue.
People use this word so much it's like a card their used to playing.
But what does this word "really" mean- is it a wish, a card, or a saying?

Then came the year of 2020 a new virus headed our way, the government reacted and told us all to hide away.

When everyone was hiding, children missed their daily plays.
People started to get off technology and started changing their old ways.
They started going out at night and gazed at the stars, they put away their cars and started playing their guitars.

The children had to work from home and started calling it a holiday.
Although they loved the fact of no school and started calling it dope, a little thing was in their heart's, a little thing called hope.
Hope that they would see their teachers and laugh with all their friends, hope that all this boredom and stress would soon come to an end.

See, this is a time when hope really matters.

Although the things we love and cherish may not be the same for a while, we've had to adjust to this so called normal, a new normal is here for a while.
When the family, and friends we love exist, a word means everything because they're not worth the risk.

Without these things we wouldn't be able to cope, so that's why we need this big, special word called HOPE.
